- Ashkenazic naming traditions (naming of children after relatives, timely & amuletic names)
- Name Relationships: Double names (unrelated, biblical associations, calques)
- Nicknames: Yiddish names, diminutives
- Interpretation: How to recognize the given name as it appears in documents
- Russian and Polish forms (spelling, declensions)
- Anglicization: transformations and adaptations
- Most popular given names: statistics and demographics

Jewish Given Names, in Cyrillic (Russian) and Latin (Polish), and Hebrew alphabets:

The following two pages contain female and male Jewish given names, as found in civil registration documents in Kielce gubernia (Russian Poland) in the late 19th century. Note that these are not necessarily all "proper" spellings, but are spellings that were actually found in the documents.

Name Variants:

- ka, -ek, -el* diminutive endings for males:
 ("-ka" is Slavic, "-el" or "-del" are Germanic)
- "Ber" → "Berel", "Berko"
  - "Yosef" → "Josel", "Josek"
  - "Yaakov" → "Jankiel"
  - "Hersh" → "Herszka", "Herszl"
- la, -dla* diminutive endings for females:
- "Sheina" → "Szejndla"
  - "Raiza" → "Rajzl"
  - "Feiga" → "Feigel"

Interchangeable letters:

Russian ф & в / Polish f & w
 Polish i,j,y interchangeable.

Most vowels are interchangeable, especially
 Russian a/e (Polish a/e), Russian o/y (Polish o/u),
 Russian ы/и (Polish y/i).

No "H" sound in Russian.

Therefore either X or Г were used.

Russian X = Polish Ch or H

Russian Г = Polish G or H
